

Echo is a reflection of sound that arrives at the listener with a delay after the direct sound. The delay is proportional to the distance of the reflecting surface from the source and the listener. Typical examples are the echo produced by the bottom of a well, by a building, or by the walls of an enclosed room and an empty room. A true echo is a single reflection of the sound source.

Each sound has an echo even if it is numbed by other sounds and various surfaces. Our senses meet the silenced echo and the sound continues within. Voices continue, disturbing city sounds vibrate in our veins, shouts and whispers, songs and cacophony dissolve in unreachable silence.

And silence starts to echo silence.

Sound is an endless wrestling with matter, to move faster and therefore to become louder.
